The three finalists for the Curry Stone Design Prize were announced today.

The prize is awarded each year to an individual or group for innovative, humanitarian-oriented design solutions. The winner, who will receive $100,000, will be announced Oct. 13 in New York City during National Design Week. Finalists receive $10,000 each.

* Elementa, a Chilean design firm (founded by Pablo Allard, Andres Iacobelli, and Alejandro Arevena) that has developed low-cost, public-housing units (pictured above).

* Maya Pedal, a nonprofit organization that builds pedal-powered contraptions, called bicimaquinas, for use in rural areas.

* Sustainable Health Enterprises, an organization that trains women in developing countries to manufacture and distribute feminine hygiene products.

Jurors for the 2010 prize are: Adriaan Geuze, founding partner of West 8 in Rotterdam; Guta Moura Guedes, director of ExperimentaDesign in Lisbon; Matilda McQuaid, curator at the Cooper-Hewitt Museum in New York; Rahul Mehrotra, a Mumbai-based architect; and prize founder Clifford Curry.
