

Meet the "Social Design Circle": the 100 architects awarded this year's Curry Stone Design Prize

January 4, 2016
Nicholas Korody

Each year, the Curry Stone Design Prize is awarded to projects that “use design to address pressing social justice issues.” To mark the 10th anniversary of the award, the Curry Stone Foundation will award 100 projects—“the most compelling social design leaders from across the world.” Dubbed the Social Design Circle, the group was selected by a jury of Foundation members and invited international experts. Every month, a new set of winners will be introduced on the Curry Stone Foundation website, with some of them participating in a new podcast hosted by Eric Cesal and Emiliano Gandolfi. For January, the winners are Arquitectura Expandida, City Repair, Estudio Teddy Cruz + Forman, Ctrl+Z, Pico Colectivo, and Recetas Urbanas.

Find out more about the winners here.

For more on the Curry Stone Design Prize, check out past coverage:

- Curry Stone Design Prize goes to Rural Urban Framework for revitalizing China's shrinking villages
- Next Up Mini-Session #11: John Lin of Rural Urban Framework
- Studios Kabako from Congo wins 2014 Curry Stone Design Prize
- 2013 Curry Stone Design Prize Winners Announced
- 2012 Curry Stone Design Prize Winners Announced